28TH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY - OCTOBER 11, 2026

Sister Mary Jean's Column

"To live is to change. To be perfect is to have changed many times."

John Henry Newman - English Catholic Theologian
Both John Henry Newman and Winston Churchill often used the above words, or similar ones in expressing their philosophes of life.

Although these two men came from greatly different backgrounds and embraced vastly different life paths, they both embraced a profoundly important fact of life - change is inevitable.

Indeed, no species survives without continually changing and adapting to its surroundings and interactions with other living beings.

As the seasons change with cooler temperatures, darker mornings, and colorful leaves, we have a very visual reminder of changes that regularly occur in the world around us.

Change in our own lives can be small and subtle or large and earth shaking. For example, you might have noticed the subtle changes in the church bulletin this week. The company who publishes the bulletin changed the internet service that for years was used to create many church bulletins.

The change was both subtle and challenging. Brunie Vega had to attend numerous on-line tutoring sessions in order to learn the new system. She even began practicing how to put the bulletin together well in advance of this week's deadline. You might say this was a small change for Brunie and us but it was a challenge that took time and patience to adapt to and make it a part of our regular routine.

Changes to our own health which many of us have experienced bring about greater challenges to our equilibrium and usual way of doing things. Perhaps a broken limb severely limits our mobility for a time and requires us to change many familiar ways of doing things.

“To live is to change. To be perfect is to have changed many times.”

John Henry Newman – English Catholic Theologian

A diagnosis that requires numerous doctor visits and test changes our daily routines and perhaps disrupts family and work schedules in unexpected ways.

Family dynamics can be another area that is constantly challenging our adaptability. One family member losing a job can impact many individuals. A family member who experiences violence or the tragedy of a car crash immediately challenges all of the members to alter their daily lives in order to provide support and assistance to the hurting individual.

We have all experienced the challenge of change in a variety of ways. Perhaps at a given moment we have immediately risen to meet the challenge and embraced it. Perhaps at another time, we have struggled and resisted the change until we were able to embrace it.

Life continues to evolve before us and within us. Let's remember the words of John Henry Newman and seek to embrace changes that occur in our lives while we trust the providence of God always.
